Photo: Alex Wroblewski/Getty Images If the Reds ever have the cash to compete on the international stage, using the Far East as a home base makes sense. It is where the world's major tournaments — the Olympics, the World Cup, the Asian games — are held. For Premier League clubs, the Asian tournament is lucrative. Manchester City is the only team that makes regular trips to Asia, on the back of a Champions League win in 2011. However, an Asian base would not be required to qualify for the World Cup, so a move there, for one or even multiple clubs, wouldn't be a likely destination for Premier League. The last time the world's top leagues met in the Asian tournament, both Scotland and England failed to qualify. The Champions League is the biggest moneyspinner for Premier League clubs. But it has only two lucrative revenue streams: TV money and Champions League qualifying fees. The Premier League TV deal is worth £4.442 billion and is split evenly between the clubs. The minimum television deal is £6.4 million. So, for ## every £1 a Premier League club makes, the TV broadcasters make £2.5. Right now, according to Deloitte, the average transfer fee between Europe and Asia for a British Occ13bf012

What's in your MBA app? - jbouw I'm guessing most of the stories about your Application To A US MBA are already on here. If not, they should be! I'm searching for some as well. What's in your application and why did you pick which schools you did? Do you have a resumé or website? Thanks! ===== jbouw Just added! Unlike in the human genome, mutation or structural variation is rare in the mouse genome \[[@B3]\], rendering transcriptome analysis an attractive approach for systems genetics in the mouse. The ease of pre-disposing the mouse genome through gene targeting and the overlapping expression patterns of paralogous genes enable insights in gene function, functional analysis and unravel novel biology beyond the mouse protein. The rapid transition to novel high throughput technologies, however, also poses new demands for large scale data acquisition and management. Despite the existence of several databases, there is no single database that encompasses all publically available genome-wide transcriptome datasets for the mouse. Databases like MusDB \[[@B1]\] and MouseBook \[[@B2]\] provide thorough lists of databases, but do not provide detailed information on the data content of the databases or a comprehensive analysis strategy to make use of the data. The Mouse Transcriptional Response Database \[[@B4]\] and the Transcriptome Analysis Database \[[@B5]\] focus only on transcriptome data of immune tissues but not on other relevant tissues. The many research groups submitting data to these databases are not aware of each others efforts, and the data are not used to their full potential. Therefore, the Genome Expression Labeling (
